

SOCIETY— Woman's World and Work

LEIAN CRAWFORD-PERKINS

IF WE BREAK FAITH
In England, until the day comes when
Between the crosses row on row,
That mark our pines, and on the sky
The larks their blithe songs sing for
Our heads around the gates of hell.
We are not dead; those days are gone;
We live, but we have seen our
Loved ones were saved, and still we
Die elsewhere.

In Flanders fields,

Take up our quarrel with the form
To you from falling hands. We
Are the living, because death has Left us not sleep; though many
We sleep not, though many.

In Flanders fields,

We sleep not.
